An Education is Gained in Numerous Ways

*Joseph G. Smoot
President
Andrews University*

ONE of the most pleasurable experiences for me at Andrews University is to witness the Christian love and human concern of other people. It is enjoyable to sit with a student for a time and talk about aspirations and goals even while discussing a current matter. There must be hundreds of such conversations every day on the campus.

Andrews University is a place of encounters individually and in groups. Hearing faculty and students in Sabbath School wrestling with spiritual truths gives me a thrill. Joining in a familiar advent hymn and listening to the spoken word with our school family at a vesper service brings spiritual refreshment. The richness of such experiences provides students with the opportunity to reach out to touch other lives.

While much of a student's time in college is spent taking courses for credit, an education is gained in numerous other ways as well. You can form lasting friendships with teachers, work supervisors, and other students and workers. You can enlarge personal experience by interaction with friends from all parts of the United States and many countries. You can be rewarded at Andrews by joining one of the variety of groups continually being organized for and by students—whether it be social, spiritual or professional.

You can have the experience of study, work, and worship as some 50 students did who built a residence hall during the winter quarter in Panama. You can have the joy of becoming part of a team effort as WAUS-FM radio station workers do while conducting a public campaign on the air to raise funds for part of the station's operating expenses. You can share in the united effort of sending books to an overseas college library. And you can enjoy the friendship of class members at a pizza party at a faculty member's home.

There is more. Touring the continent with two distinguished teachers who conduct the European Study Group Tour, being a member of an honor society, participating in departmental assemblies, being a member of a college bowl team, gaining gymnastic skills by being a member of the Gymnics team, working in a missionary outreach project, participating in a student missionary program—these, and countless other activities, enrich Andrews students while they earn a college degree. You can be a part of the Andrews experience.

Involvement is a way of campus life at Andrews. And it is through involvement that students daily strive to reach university ideals of a balanced spiritual, intellectual, physical and social person.

A Student Perspective

by Becky Frost

We asked Andrews student Becky Frost to give her personal views of the university. Having come from the background of public school, she considers it a distinct privilege to be enrolled at a Christian college. Becky has been in the Andrews Scholars for three years. She served as the president of the student association in her junior year and is currently the vice president for publications of the Adventist Intercollegiate Association. She will graduate from Andrews in June with Bachelor of Arts degrees in English and communication.

EDUCATION in the eighties promises more opportunities than ever before. Colleges and universities are offering bigger and better selections of specialized study programs, providing the skills needed to enter a larger variety of jobs in today's world of business. Unfortunately, however, many people believe the purpose of a college ends here.

It doesn't. As a Seventh-day Adventist Christian university, Andrews concerns itself with a lot more. An emphasis on quality and excellence in education applies to not one, but four aspects of campus life. Academics, social and physical activities with spiritual understanding combine to make the Andrews experience a rich one.

Andrews' curriculum centers around one basic theme: the development of the whole person. Education becomes the integration of the mind, the body and the spirit of each student. And that leads to a long range goal for students. Each person strives for his highest potential.

Although small, Andrews has a broad scope of courses, preparing students for several career choices. A student can choose from the popular areas of liberal arts, sciences and technology. Many service-oriented programs are available as well.

New students at Andrews may be surprised to find a full list of general requirements for undergraduate degrees. In keeping with the standards of a Christian education, the university offers a total plan of learning.

Picking up the basics in many different areas can lead to a healthier life, appreciation of the arts and sciences as a whole, and a better understanding of the importance of spiritual things.

This information combines with a student's chosen area for study to ensure a more rounded outlook.

At Andrews, what a student learns outside of the classroom contributes significantly to his development. So it makes sense to look for a school that can offer a variety of new experiences.

A school's personality is often influenced by its size. Small schools, like Andrews, are usually more personal and provide more opportunities to know professors, administrators and fellow students. Yet Andrews is large enough so that a student need not feel trapped.

A unique population of students and faculty at Andrews contributes to the caring atmosphere on campus. People from all over the United States and a variety of foreign countries are involved in special friendships.

In experiencing these relationships, students have the opportunity to learn and appreciate firsthand the many customs, ideas, ways of understanding and accepting those from different cultures. And the lasting friendships will be remembered long after final exams.

Smaller schools are also an incentive to become involved in extracurricular activities. Andrews provides plenty of opportunities to put student talent to use. Student clubs, organizations and performances supply many weekly activities.

Andrews represents a special community of people devoted to people. Students learn to get involved and be aware that others have needs that perhaps only they can fulfill. This sharing creates a closeness unmatched in large public institutions.

No one should be shortchanged on a good education because it seems unaffordable. Andrews furnishes a wide variety of financial aid and work programs to help students cut costs.

Even more, many students are eligible for federal and state assistance. So in spite of rising costs, students can find ways to cover college expenses.

And it's worth it. At Andrews University men and women come to learn. They learn to relate to the world beyond their books. To the world of people, places, and personal development.

More Than Time-Clock Tedium

by Sandra Doran

THERE'S more to a campus job than just putting in the hours and paying the bill," says Terry Newmyer, director of student labor and housing at Andrews University.

And Mr. Newmyer's feelings on employment don't stop at mere theorizing. Implemented on the Andrews' campus among the 2,200 students earning more than three million dollars from the university yearly, his ideas represent a work ethic that stands for far more than just time-clock tedium

The prime purpose for student employment, according to Mr. Newmyer, is that of personal development. "At Andrews University we believe the employment experience should be part of the education process," he says. "The approximately one thousand dollars a student earns in a year certainly helps with paying the bill. But we feel the financial benefit is far outweighed by the development factor."

National figures show, Mr. Newmyer goes on, that college students who work earn higher grades than those who are unemployed while in school. It's simply a matter of discipline—the less time a student has, the more he has to learn effective time management and responsibility.

"We put a tremendous amount of importance on the factors of responsibility and discipline," Mr. Newmyer says. "From the time a student takes his first job on campus as a freshman, to the time he leaves Andrews, we keep a detailed record of his service.

"If a student does poorly at one job, this does not mean he will be kept from working on campus in the future. Rather, his new employer will sit down with him and go over his record, encouraging better performance and a new commitment to his work."

In addition to the sense of responsibility developed in student employees, Mr. Newmyer sees the specialized skills learned on the job as positive bonuses that come with the employment package.

With 70 different departments on the Andrews campus, students gain unique experience performing duties as clerks, flight instructors, secretaries, custodial foremen, cashiers, industrial workers and others.

"We put a lot of stock in our students," Mr. Newmyer admits. "And they haven't disappointed us yet.

"Actually we have a very small percentage of full-time staff members to maintain the university," he goes on. "Right now, for instance, the grounds of this 1,600-acre campus are cared for by only three full-time staff members and a large crew of students. At custodial we have six staff supervisors and more than a hundred students working."

To create even more student positions, Mr. Newmyer's department began a special projects plan this year which will provide close to a quarter of a million dollars to "supply a job for every student that needs one."

The plan is especially beneficial to the departments on campus which are allowed to expand their labor force, using student help to implement further research and do clerical work.

Master of Divinity student Maylan Schurch, for example, is employed at WAUS-FM studios as part of the special projects fund.

Working as associate editor of the radio station's fine-arts quarterly, Maylan expresses great enthusiasm for his experience as a student employee.

"Working at a radio station is something that I've always wanted to do," he says. "I feel it will be invaluable to me as a pastor, since I plan to do weekly radiobroadcasts, and other things which will rely on the skills I've been fortunate enough to learn here."

And Terry Newmyer feels equally as fortunate to have such talented students working for the university. Showing his appreciation in such things as the Student Employee of the Year Award, he seeks to let the students know that their contribution to Andrews counts.

"We've got a good thing going here," he says. "And the best part about it is—everybody benefits."

THE UNIQUENESS OF ANDREWS

Its People and Its Programs

by Sandra Doran

IT could happen to anyone. Mix-up in class schedule. Changes at the last minute. An entangling conflict.

For awhile, it almost looked like they would not be able to graduate. But the crisis was curbed with a minimum of despondency and an abundance of understanding.

"It happened several years ago in one of my Greek classes," says Elly Economou, assistant professor of religion at Andrews University.

"There was a misprint in the summer school bulletin, and two students signed up for my class, which they needed for a language requirement to graduate. But they discovered that another course they had to take was meeting at the same time."

Try as they might, class members could not find a time when all could reschedule to accommodate the two seniors. Dr. Economou dismissed her students, went home and prayed about the dilemma.

"The next morning, when I came in, I asked if anyone had come up with a solution," she remembers. "One student half-jokingly suggested that we meet at 6:30 A.M."

That was the answer. An entire class unanimously voted to rise before sun-up for the sake of two members.

"One boy had to come from Niles each morning, and another drove 35 miles to get in every day. I imagine they had to get up very early, but they didn't even protest because they knew how badly those two seniors wanted to graduate," says Dr. Economou. "This kind of spirit is what makes teaching at Andrews University such a pleasure."

Unique people. Students who work together until a solution is agreed upon. Teachers who go home and pray about the daily complexities of college life. Andrews University is no ordinary place.

But the uniqueness of Andrews doesn't stop with its people. As a university made up of four distinct schools, it has the benefit of being both large and small at the same time.

Large enough to boast an olympic-size swimming pool, four museums, and a library containing more than 688,000 bibliographic items. Small enough to offer a 1 to 13 teacher-student ratio. Large enough to provide the facilities and equipment necessary for a solid education in the 20th century. Small enough to give students personal attention and warmth.

With such an assortment of talents and treasures, Andrews has several hidden bonuses that many people in the Lake Union do not even know about. Were you aware, for example, that Andrews' College of Technology offers degrees that represent some of the most marketable skills in the job arena today?

And even if students are not planning a career around technology, they have the opportunity to balance out the bookwork learning skills in such courses as "Personal Auto Care," "Wood Construction," "Upholstery," "Color Photography," or "Furniture Design."

Six main departments make up the College of Technology—occupational education, engineering, engineering technology, industrial education, aviation and architecture.

Leading to more than 20 different types of certificates, occupational education training ranges from nine months to two years to complete. With emphasis on "the short and fast," courses are structured to cover the essentials for career readiness.

Andrews' engineering curriculum is offered in conjunction with Walla Walla College in Washington. The first two years are taken on the Andrews campus and the last two on the West Coast—a program accredited by the Engineers' Council for Professional Development.

Engineering technology, a skills-oriented concentration separate from engineering, is offered totally on the Andrews campus on both the associate and bachelor's levels. Eight different specialties are taught.

The industrial education department prepares its majors both to teach and to work in industry. As skilled craftsmen themselves, instructors pass on to the students the techniques of their trades.

Andrews' airpark—the center for the largest mission aviation program of any denomination in the world—provides the setting for men and women to become pilots, airframe and powerplant mechanics, or airport managers.

Holding one of the highest performance rates of any flight school in this part of the country, the airpark administers eight written examinations for Federal Aviation Administration licenses.

Architecture, the sixth department in Andrews' College of Technology, stresses a practical approach, teaching students to successfully combine attractiveness, safety and usefulness in the design process.

In addition to the two- and four-year degree programs, the department offers a parallel course in construction, a fifth-year in conjunction with the Lawrence Institute of Technology in Detroit, and a minor in drafting.

And all of these literally hundreds of career choices merely represent one of the four subdivisions of Andrews University.

The College of Arts and Sciences also presents unique learning experiences, with courses designed to challenge the individual in his or her chosen field.

The sciences cover a wide variety of disciplines, with specialized equipment for the students' use, such as the scanning electron microscope. An unusually high percentage of graduates go on to serve in the fields of teaching, medicine, research and industry.

Andrews' education department fosters practical teacher-preparation in several specialties.

One unique feature is the reading laboratory, where education students can work with children of all ages who come to the clinic for remedial reading.

The communication department at Andrews also provides a fresh approach to learning, with its two distinct branches. The communicative disorders program leads to certification in audiology and speech pathology. Those taking this major have the benefit of working with patients in Andrews' full-time speech-and-hearing clinic.

The second branch of the communication program gives young professionals the opportunity to become proficient in journalism and broadcasting.

WAUS-FM, Andrews' 50,000-watt radio station, affords students the chance to gain first-hand experiences in a live studio.

Andrews' School of Graduate Studies features advanced study with professors who themselves are continually engaged in research. In addition to the Master of Arts and Master of Arts in Teaching degrees, a fifth-year diploma is available in some fields, as well as a doctoral degree.

Instructors spend hours working with candidates individually, encouraging maximum development of talent, and fostering professional growth.

The Seventh-day Adventist Theological Seminary located on the Andrews campus makes up the fourth component of the academic environment.

Here men and women from all over the world train for active roles in the Seventh-day Adventist ministry. Programs lead to the Master of Divinity degree, Doctor of Theology, and Doctor of Ministry.

Andrews University is no ordinary institution. Its people are different. Its programs unique. Said Ellen White a century ago, "Those who attend our colleges are to have a training different from that given by the common schools of the day."—Counsels to Parents, Teachers and Students, p. 501.

Andrews University has not forgotten.

DISASTER AND FAMINE RELIEF OFFERING, MAY 10

For the Least of These

by R. W. O'Ffill

IN a remote part of northwestern Haiti, I recently visited with village leaders who were anxious for SAWS to see some of their recent community development projects.

Accompanying me was a Haitian pastor who described the challenges facing his people. An indication of the poverty of the Haitian people can be seen in the yearly tithe receipts—about two dollars per member.

The pastor said: "Our people are faithful in their tithes and offerings, the problem is they have almost no income. They are asking us to teach them how to farm, how to irrigate their crops, how to increase crop yields so that they can have something to give to the Lord."

This was significant to me. If we impress the people in third-world countries to be faithful in their tithes and offerings, we should also provide them the means to earn for themselves.

Many third-world countries are ravaged by malnutrition and starvation because the people do not have the technology to provide for their basic needs.

SAWS programs are designed to help people help themselves.

Even after a disaster, people are given tools and materials that will help them reconstruct their houses and reestablish their means for earning a livelihood.

In the aftermath of the hurricane that struck the Caribbean in the fall of 1979, SAWS provided 500 families each on the island of Dominica and the Dominican Republic with materials to construct houses which will withstand strong winds.

In Thailand SAWS is drilling wells and building earthen dams that will enable villages, newly located because of war, to return to the cultivation of rice.

The philosophy of self-help was tested during 1979 when some SAWS personnel had to leave the African country of Chad, because of civil strife. SAWS had developed a large irrigation project which will ultimately benefit 1,200 families.

"The program will collapse when you leave," the SAWS people were told. "When you are not there the people will not work." But eight months later the program has not collapsed and the people are working as hard as ever. SAWS personnel will return to Chad this summer to expand the program.

Some of the greatest challenges to SAWS came in 1979—flood, storm, earthquake and famine.

The plight of nearly 500,000 Cambodian refugees captured the sympathy of people around the world.

Gifts to SAWS made possible medical and relief teams of nearly 30 people who are currently working to relieve the suffering in camps and villages along the Thai/Cambodian border.

This year funds are needed for new SAWS programs opening in the Upper Volta and Rwanda, as well as a sufficient relief effort for the hundreds of thousands of Afghan refugees in Pakistan.

Please remember SAWS on May 10. Mark your offering envelope "SAWS," and help us meet the challenge of a suffering world.

SAWS has produced a film report of its activities entitled "His Healing Hands." If you have not seen this film, you should contact your local conference office to arrange a showing in your area.

A Divine Design

by Reuben L. Hilde

CURRICULUM has been succinctly defined as "a design for learning." And it seems clear that God instituted a design for learning, a plan that would enable mankind to grow into the divine likeness.

Throughout history God's people have usually been faithful to that original model. The patriarchs continued an education program for their families which was based on Eden's school. Later the Israelites followed a plan of education outlined by the Lord (Deuteronomy 6:6-8).

The curriculum in the schools of the Israelites was comprised of worship at the Tabernacle and instruction in health, industry, music, God's law, and the concept of salvation.

In addition to this curriculum, the schools of the prophets had three great objectives:

"These schools were intended to serve as a barrier against the wide-spreading corruption, to provide for the mental and spiritual welfare of the youth, and to promote the prosperity of the nation by furnishing it with men qualified to act in the fear of God as leaders and counselors."—Education, p. 46.

If we were to change the word "nation" to "Seventh-day Adventist church" in this quotation, we would see that the objectives of these schools of the prophets were identical to the objectives of current Adventist education.

Ellen White wrote, "The system of education instituted at the beginning of the world was to be a model for man throughout all aftertime."—Education, p. 20.

First, this seems to suggest that a curriculum design was established that should be copied.

Second, it suggests that the Eden school curriculum, will go on throughout eternity. "Heaven is a school; its field of study, the universe; its teacher, the Infinite One. A branch of this school was established in Eden; and, the plan of redemption accomplished, education will again be taken up in the Eden school." Education, p. 301.

April 26, 1980, is the day set aside by the General Conference as Education Day. On that day we should remember three things in a special way:

God established a school in Eden for His children.

Since this is the "aftertime," education should be provided that will accomplish for Adventist children that which the Eden school was designed to do.

Adventist schools are preparatory schools for the time when "education will again be taken up in the Eden school."

God has invited us all to enter into the finest work ever given to man, the education of our children.

What a delightful privilege it is to support those schools which have a God-given design for learning and a noble purpose: the restoration of the image of God in man, now and for eternity.

HINSDALE NEWS NOTE

● Demonstrating Hinsdale Hospital's commitment to help its personnel become healthier, and in response to many requests, an exercise class has recently begun for employees. According to health educator Dave Petersen, M.S., the exercise class meets for an hour twice a week to help employees "get in better shape for outdoor activities this spring."

DEVELOPMENT PLAN INCLUDES PARKING GARAGE

HINSDALE—An acute need for additional parking and work space has prompted Hinsdale Hospital to develop a plan that, if approved, will supply a parking garage and two additional floors to the south wing of the hospital.

Hinsdale's short-range development plan includes constructing a parking garage behind Tupper Hall on the hospital campus. The three-level, above-ground garage would hold approximately 550 cars at an estimated cost of $3.5 to $3.8 million.

Part two of the proposed construction consists of adding two additional stories to the present three-story south wing of the hospital. This would add 32,000 square feet of floor space.

This space and other area available as a result of the addition would be used by obstetrics, the laboratory, and other ancillary departments. No additional beds are proposed by adding these floors.

The parking garage expansion has already received state approval for construction.

The hospital is presently seeking endorsement for the two-story addition from the Illinois Health Facilities Planning Board.

The proposed development plan is being reviewed by the Hinsdale Village Board with a decision expected this spring. Construction on the parking garage could begin this year.

This new plan follows the withdrawal by the hospital of the East Campus Project from the Village Board Review last year. The project caused community concern over possible increased traffic from the proposed professional office building which is not included in the new plan.

176 RECEIVE EMPLOYEE AWARDS

HINSDALE—At its February 24 employee awards banquet, Hinsdale Hospital honored 176 employees who represented 1,395 years of employment there. Above, hospital president Irwin Hansen congratulates Betty Jacoby, executive secretary for 15 years.

HINSDALE RECORDS HIGH CENSUS

HINSDALE—Hinsdale Hospital's census count for the first three months of 1980 indicates that the daily average of inpatients is a new record.

January averaged 375 patients per day in the 440-bed hospital, with February at 381 and March at about 370

The highest day so far this year was January 23 with 421 patients.

"Because some beds are limited to maternity, pediatric or psychiatric patients, the 440-bed capacity is a misnomer," says Taylor Ransone, assistant director of the patient business office. "Actually we are staffed for about 340 patients."

One result of this patient overflow was a record 13,803 pounds of linen processed by the hospital on Sunday, January 27. The normal amount per day averages 8,250 pounds.

During 1979, the patient census averaged 346.9, compared to 333.05 for 1978.

Sabbath afternoon hundreds of members, with local pastors, conference leaders and union personnel, visited interested people throughout Chicago.

ALL POTATOES, NO MEAT

This headline, recently appearing in the Indianapolis News, introduced the story of Phillip and Cynthia Prime's new vegetarian restaurant that recently opened in Carmel.

The Primes are members of the Indianapolis Glendale Church. For many years they have wanted to open a gourmet natural foods restaurant. Their dreams were realized when they opened Shadrachs Restaurant the weekend before Christmas. Cynthia says it is the first of its kind in the Midwest.

Phillip, a chemist at Eli Lilly Company, came from a family of 14 who were raised on natural foods. He states that his father was never sick a day in his life.

The Primes advertised all over the country to find a chef who could work with natural foods. They discovered James Tramel Jr. who has worked, among other places, at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York.

They were told that it was impossible to make it in the restaurant business without a liquor license. For those who like to drink, they have three nonalcoholic beers from Switzerland and four from Germany. They also have non-alcoholic wine to offer their customers.

The Primes are earnestly praying that this new adventure will open up new opportunities for witnessing.

The Elwood Church now wears a new coat of paint and new steps.

ELWOOD MEMBERS REDECORATE CHURCH

The Elwood Church building has been the object of many hours of attention this past fall. Carroll Perry, first elder, and Pastors Randy Murphy and David Slee joined forces to make the church an attractive place to worship.

The following improvements have been made: new paint inside and out, new cabinets downstairs, new concrete steps with an iron railing, new carpeting, new pews, a new piano, and new furniture for the children's classroom.

The pastors are presently conducting a Century 21 Crusade in the church.

This special program took place just four months before graduation and was intended to recognize the senior class as important leaders in the church and school, and to inspire them to attain high goals in this life and the life to come.

"Faith's Freeway" was the title of Elder Wrate's sermon, and he encouraged the 54 seniors to achieve goals that would list them along with "the worthies" in the faith chapter of the Bible.

Ten of the seniors are from local families and are members of the Cicero Church. Two of the class officers participated in the worship service. Jeff Twomley, class president, called for the morning offering, and Sally Orlich, vice president, offered the benediction.

students in the Berrien Springs Village School are learning more than the three R's.

Harry Rogers, science and practical arts teacher, said the purpose of the co-op program is to teach students punctuality, accuracy and dependability. At the same time, he said, it allows them the opportunity to explore employment options that might be available when they are ready to enter the job market.

Rebecca Williams and Rocky De Grave spend two hours each Wednesday at Andrews University Bookstore. They learn to price merchandise, maintain files for special book orders, and stock shelves.

According to bookstore manager Fay Chamberlain, they have been excellent workers.

The other 63 students in the program have been working in small engine repair, baking, woodworking, ceramics, typing and sewing.

Student reaction to the program is generally positive, he said.

Jeff Wilson, one of the students, said, "It gives us a chance to know what it will be like when we have to get jobs."

Mandy Wroe likes the opportunity to meet new people, while Jill De Grave says the program is fun.

Mr. Rogers said the students would like the two-hour weekly period extended to four hours.

Local businesses cooperating in the program include the Andrews University Bookstore, Shrader's Market, The Adventist Book Center, Erhard Furniture, Waterbed Wonderland, Kuhlman Motors, Wilson-Collier Hardware, and Perris Upholstery.

SIZZLE FRANKS. LOMA LINDA DISCOVERS THE MISSING LINK.

Other people have made meatless franks before, but they always left a lot to be desired. Namely, the real taste and texture that make franks such a favorite among both adults and kids.

Now Loma Linda has discovered the missing link.

We call them Sizzle Franks, and we think you'll call them delicious. Because Loma Linda uses a special ingredient that combines two different vegetable proteins for better flavor and texture, and a more favorable nutritional balance.

Of course Sizzle Franks have something missing, too. Things like animal fat, preservatives and cholesterol. And chemicals like sodium nitrate and nitrite. So with Sizzle Franks you get all the flavor and fun that make franks so popular, together with the pure, wholesome nutrition of vegetable protein.

Sizzle Franks come packed in handy cans, ready to heat and put between a bun. They also make a hearty main dish served with beans and hot bread. Or you may cut them into scrumptious bite-sized hors d'oeuvres.

Try some Loma Linda Sizzle Franks soon. And see what you've been missing.
