JOHN KNOX, THE REFORMER.

HN KNOX was born in 1505, in Scotland. To remember the date of his birth, connect his name with that of Henry VIII. of England, who to began to reign when knox was three years old. It is best not to try to remember exact years, but connect different characters in history together. Knox was born of Roman Catholic parents, and though from the time he began to study the writings of the "fathers" of the Church-especially Jerome and Augustine-he suspected all was not right with the Roman doctrines, yet by the new way of belief, and join the their minister, and though he disliked Knox spoken of as "narrow" and ant till 1542, or when he was thirtyseven. You have called yourself a Protestant all your life, no doubt, hardly thinking what the word means; king died when only eighteen years but Knox knew very well what was of age, and the future looked so dark involved in declaring that he pro- for the Protestants that many of them tested against the errors and superstitions of the Romish Church. He saw friends put to death for the new cause, and at last, with a party of these protesters, he had to take refuge in the castle of St. Andrews, where he acted as one of the chaplains of the garrison, and preached so earnestly that a great many who were "almost persuaded" decided to stand

Reformers, unpopular as they were.

After a year's siege, the party in the castle were starved out, and their enemies promised that their lives should be spared and they should only be obliged to leave Scotland. But the promises were broken; some of them were made close prisoners, while Knox and others were loaded with chains, and made to work as galleyslaves. Not one of them, though, would renounce his faith. Knox was so broken down by his hardships that he was ill with fever, and his life despaired of; but God had a work for him to do, and after nineteen months he was set at liberty, in February, 1549. Edward VI., the boy-king, was then reigning in England, and as he was a liberal-minded king, who sincerely desired to do right, Knox went straight to London. He preached so boldly that the bishops were afraid, for though they were not Romanists, they were not quite sure as to being Protestants. King Edward liked his zeal and honesty so well that he was appointed one of the King's chaplains, and helped to make some important corrections in the Book of Common Prayer. The king liked him so much he did not profess himself a Protest- that he even tried to make a bishop of him, but Knox said he did not approve of bishoprics, so he remained plain John Knox. The good young went to France and Switzerland.

> Knox lived for some time at Geneva, where he became the friend of another grand man, John Calvin. At Geneva, though Knox was fifty years old, he set to work to learn Hebrew, as he had never had the opportunity when young. A number of the exiles who lived at Frankfort, in Germany, asked Knox to come and be leaving his quiet study at Geneva, he went and preached faithfully; but as part were Episcopalians and part Presbyterians, and both parties wanted things their own way, Knox left them and went back to Geneva, where he stayed with his friends for a few months, till an earnest call came from Scotland for his help. He spent a year in Scotland, preaching day after

At that time the Scottish Protestants first entered into a covenant to stand true to the new cause. His friends at Geneva called him back to be one of the pastors of the English congregation, and there he stayed for three years, when Scotland needed him so much that he said "Good-by" forever to his kind Swiss friends and the English exiles, and went back to his native land, though men and women were being burned at the stake in both England and Scotland under the reign of "Bloody Mary." For years Scotland had been ruled by a regent, but in 1561 poor Mary ("Queen of Scots," as she is called) came back from France to rule her people. She sent for the bold Reformer, John Knox, almost as soon as she landed. But though she, like Felix of old, trembled and was almost persuaded, he never succeeded in convincing her of the truth.

From this time John Knox preached at the church of St. Giles, Edinburgh, traveling back and forth wherever he could do the most good. He made it "his habit" to preach "twice on Sundays and thrice on other days of the week." Was not that work? Remember that Queen Elizabeth was now reigning in England, and in 1587 she beheaded her cousin Mary, Queen of Scots. Knox lived five years longer, but he was very feeble after 1570, when he had a slight stroke of apoplexy.

Now, as to his looks. He was a small man with a feeble body, which had been wasted by various hardships (the nineteen months as a galley slave among others) and by hard mental work. His natural gifts were good, and he improved them by study. He was particularly eloquent, and though most people seem to think of him as stern and hard, he enjoyed fun, and was tender and kind to women and children. We must remember that he lived in times that required great energy and decision. If you hear "bigoted," keep in mind that he had to contend for the truth against the fiercest persecutors and the most obstinate enemies of the true religion. We who reap the fruits of his life of struggle should not judge him, but honor and revere him.

Besides all his preaching and traveling, John Knox wrote a Historie of the Reformation of Religioun within the Realm of Scotland, and several smaller works. He was twice married; his first wife was an English lady who died after a few years, leaving him two young sons. His second wife was a descendant of King Robert the Second of Scotland; she had three daughters, and outlived her husband.

Have I made it very clear to you that John Knox lived in the time of Henry VIII., Edward VI., Bloody Mary, and Elizabeth ?-that he lived a part of the time abroad ?- and will you try to remember his earnest work? We cannot all be great public reformers, but let us each begin at once with our own lives and reform whatever we see amiss there, and then, if there is any public work to be done, we shall be pure and strong to do it .-Hope Ledyard, in S. S. Visitor.

CASTLE BUILDING.

ELLA was comfortably seated in a great arm-chair, reading of heroic deeds, and wishing, oh, so much, that she might accomplish something to make her famous-something to be talked about and win praise from all who knew her, as well as from an admiring public, far and wide.

"Now, if I were only old enough to be a Florence Nightingale, go to the seat of war and nurse the soldiers, would n't that be splendid? Or, like Grace Darling, rescue some one from a watery grave. Dear me, what can I, or what shall I, ever do?"

And foolish Ella, forgetting that her room needed righting, that she had not practiced her music lesson, or that her mother might need some assistance this busy morning, with nurse sick and Willie fretting over not receiving his usual attention, went on idly dreaming or planning what she would do at some future day, when old enough to accomplish something worth while.

"Ella, dear," called out a sweet, gentle voice from the parlor room, "won't you please run up into the nursery and help amuse Willie? Jennie's face is aching so she cannot pay much attention to the baby."

"Oh dear, it is always just so; I no sooner get comfortably seated reading, than I must go and amuse Willie. He's a perfect bother!" mentally said Ella, as she slowly closed her book, and still more slowly rose out of the arm-chair into which she had curled herself for a good indulgence in reading and castle-building.

"Come, Ella, Willie will get to fretting real hard, and then it will be much harder to amuse him."

"But, mother, this is a holiday, and I think I might have a little rest and pleasure of my own, without having to amuse baby whenever he is cross and fretful."

"Very true, dear, it is your holiday, but cannot you find pleasure in making others happy? I would not have my little girl grow up cold and selfish, thinking only of her own enjoyment."

"Grow up cold and selfish!" repeated Ella, as she ascended the stairs. "Why, mamma don't know what great things I mean to accomplish one of these days. How I do wish I was big enough now to go away to China or Africa to teach the heathen, or do something of the kind."

"O Miss Ella, I'm so glad you have come. I have a distracting toothache, and the neuralgia all down the one side of my face, and I can't amuse Willie no way."

"You took cold talking for so long a time over the fence last evening," replied Ella, in no very gracious tone. "There, Willie, stop your crying, or I'll not play with you. Just see, you have upset the soap-suds, and broken your soap-bubble pipe."

Willie had stopped crying upon his sister's entrance into the room, but now he stood with quivering lips, scarcely knowing whether to confess he was sorry, or to rebel and again set up that defiant yell.

What has become of Ella's wish to care for wounded soldiers, or teach the the heathen? Has she poured oil upon the troubled waters? helped to ease Jennie of the torturing pain she is so patiently trying to endure, or seen what gentle words may do to comfort Willie? Alas, no. The work just before her does not seem grand enough to claim her attention. It is not one that will win praise from her fellow-creatures, and so Ella sets about amusing her little brother in a preoccupied, listless manner. Jennie is not sent to lie down, nor Willie put into a thoroughly good humor, until mamma, disengaged, enters the room, and by her bright, sunny face and manner, sets things to rights. Jennie has something given her for her toothache, and a soothing lotion to bathe her face, and is then sent off to lie down and rest. Willie is taken upon her lap, and quieted with a pretty picture book.

Ella watched the proceedings, wondering why she had not thought of them, and with regretful feelings, tells her mother so.

"Well, Puss, it is not so easy to put old heads on young shoulders."

"But, mamma, only this very morning I was planning what great deeds I meant to do, and was wishing to begin them right straight off."

"And forgot that the work directly before you was the only one God required of you. Pm afraid my little girl indulges in castle-building. Like bright bubbles, they only fall to pieces, unless you first lay a firm foundation." "And how can I do that, mamma? I do not quite understand your meaning." "It is this: Day-dreaming, or castle-building, as I call it, for future time, to the neglect of present duties, is apt to weaken the character instead of strengthening it; so when the time comes for some great and heroic deed, such ones are unnerved or incapacitated to act in the way they had dreamed they should; while another make others happy, unconsciously performs brave deeds all the time. This is the firm foundation of which I spoke. And you see, Ella, when a time comes for what you consider great and heroic deeds, they are performed as naturally, and with as little thought of self, as the simple ones have long been transacted, and, dear child, let me add, without a thought of this world's applause, such as castle-builders expect to follow their great deeds."

Ella looked very thoughtful. Had mamma so clearly read her thoughts? Or was this really the way with all dreamy castle-builders? If so, she would not be one of them. And forming a good resolution, she no longer found the care of little Willie a bother, or present duties distasteful. But in the strength of Him who ever helps his trusting children to do right, Ella at once set about building a firm foundation, against the time when she might be called upon to make greater sacrifices for others. - Christian Weekly.

SEPTEMBER.

O sound of the beech-nuts falling Through the green and yellow leaves, Only the rainy west wind calling The swallows from the eaves. No fading trees are shedding Their golden splendor yet; But a sunset gleam is spreading, That seems like a regret.

And the crimson-breasted birdie Sings his sweet funereal hymn On the oak leaves grim and sturdy, In the twilight gathering dim. Death comes to pomp and glory; They fade-the sunny hours; And races old in story Pass like the summer flowers.

STARTING ANEW.

VACATION is over, and all the boys and girls are at their homes again. This is well. It is not good for anybody, old or young, to have too long a time for play. A little play and a good deal of work should be the rule. God himself works, and he would have all his children work. He never made any one to be idle. The devil only has use for idle people. But in returning home most of our young readers go back to their schools and their studies. Here they are at work. It is to be a long pull of eight or nine months, and it will be a splendid opportunity for accomplishing a great deal. As we have been through this experience, our young friends will, we are sure, permit us to say a few words. And the first thing we would say is, Do not be afraid of work-of hard work. Many of our studies may appear very dry and uninteresting, and it may be a real drudgery to get our lessons. But never mind this; some day you will find the benefit. The harder you work away now, the more you will have by and by. The second thing we would say is, Improve each day as it comes. See to it that your habits of promptness, of cleanliness, of regularity, and of perseverance are carefully watched. These things may be the best part of your education. Whoever improves the whole day as well as he can will accomplish much. In the third place, Do not neglect who forgets self, and daily strives to any of your studies. You cannot from evil?"—S. S. Times.

tell now which will prove the most important. It is quite common to hear boys and girls say they hate this or that study. What! hate the very study which gives them the knowledge they will most need? Remember the old saying, "The roots of learning may be bitter, but the fruits will be sweet." Just be willing to plod along, and by and by you will get over the hard places and have a smooth road before you. Begin and continue right, and you will end right.—Parish Vis-

THE SECRET.

"On dear, how stupid everything seems!" sighed Laura.

"What do you mean, Laura?"

"Why, that I am tired of being just a common-place American girl. I wish that I were a nobleman's daughter, or a queen. It is just as though I were thirsty for something, Cousin Nell."

"My dear child, take just one week to read about the queens. Count, as you read, the happy and the unhappy ones, and let me know the result. I will give you the words of a beautiful French queen to begin with:

"'Alas!' (she wrote at one time to her favorite niece)-'alas, that I cannot give you my experience-that I cannot show you the weariness of soul by which the great are devoured, the difficulty which they find in getting through their days! Do you not see how they die of sadness in the midst of that fortune which has been a burden to them? I have been young and beautiful, I have tasted many pleasures, I have been universally beloved; at a more advanced age I have passed years in the intercourse of talent and wit; and I solemnly protest to you that all conditions leave a frightful void.'

"This, Laura, is true of every heart, high or low, rich or poor, till it find out the secret of those words of Jesus, -the words that he spoke to the woman at the well of Samaria: " Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again; but whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life."

PERSONAL INFLUENCE.

Up in the higher Alps the snow is sometimes piled so high, and is so evenly balanced, that the crack of a whip or the shout of a voice may give sufficient vibration to the air to bring down the whole mass upon the travelers below. So in our moral world there are souls just hovering over the abyss of ruin: a word or even a look from us may cause them to plunge down into the depths from which there is no return; or a helping hand stretched out to them in a moment of peril may lead them back to the safe, pure paths of virtue and peace.

Knowing that we have such power, shall we not humbly pray, "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us

SCENES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

LESSON 36 .- A WOMAN ANOINTS THE FEET OF JESUS.

THE fame of Jesus spread throughout Judea, and in all parts of the country people were talking about his miracles. John the Baptist had now been in prison more than a year, but even in that gloomy place he heard of the wonderful things which Jesus was doing. Then John sent two of his disciples to Jesus to learn whether he was really the Christ or not. "When the men were come unto him, they said, John the Baptist hath sent us unto thee, saying, Art thou he that should come? or look we for another?" Jesus waited until these men had seen many astonishing miracles, and then said to them, "Go and show John again those things which ye do hear and see : the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them. And blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in me." After John's disciples had started on their way back to him, Jesus spoke to those around him about John, giving him great honor, and saying that he was a prophet and more than a prophet.

"And one of the Pharisees desired him that he would eat with him. And he went into the Pharisee's house, and sat down to meat. And, behold, a woman in the city, which was a sinner, when she knew that Jesus sat at meat in the Pharisee's house, brought an alabaster box of ointment, and stood at his feet behind him weeping, and began to wash his feet with tears, and did wipe them with the hairs of her head, and kissed his feet, and anointed them with the ointment.

"Now when the Pharisee which had bidden him saw it, he spake within himself, saying, This man, if he was a prophet, would have known who and what manner of woman this is that toucheth him; for she is a sinner. And Jesus answering said unto him, Simon, I have somewhat to say unto thee. And he saith, Master, say on. There was a certain creditor which had two debtors : the one owed five hundred pence, and the other fifty. And when they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both. Tell me, therefore, which of them will love him most? Simon answered and said, I suppose he to whom he forgave most. And he said unto him, Thou hast rightly judged. And he turned to the woman, and said unto Simon, Seest thou this woman? I entered into thine house, thou gavest me no water for my feet; but she hath washed my feet with tears, and wiped them with the hairs of her head. Thou gavest me no kiss; but this woman since the time I came in hath not ceased to kiss my feet. My head with oil thou didst not anoint, but this woman hath anointed my feet with ointment. Wherefore I say unto thee, Her sins, which are many, are forgiven; for she loved much: but to whom little is forgiven, the same loveth little. And he said unto her, Thy sins are forgiven.

"And they that sat at meat with him began to say within themselves, Who is this that forgiveth sins also? And he said to the woman, Thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace."

NOTES.

The fortress in which John is supposed to have been imprisoned lay on the east side of the Dead Sea, almost on a line with Bethlehem. The castle was situated up among the rocks in a very wild and lonely place, and was surrounded with high walls. Remains of this stern and gloomy prison, with under-ground dungeons hewn down into the rocks, may still be seen. The name of the fortress was Machaerus, and it was also called "the black tower."

The custom among the Jews was not to eat sitting, as we do, but reclining on couches. The table was made by three tables, raised like ours, and placed so as to form a square, with a clear space in the center, and one end quite open. On the sides of them were placed cushions, capable of containing three or more persons. On these the guests reclined, leaning on their left side, with their feet extended from the table, and so lying that the head of one naturally reclined on the bosom of another. To recline near to one in this manner denoted intimacy, and was what was meant by lying in the bosom of another. John 13:23; Luke 16:22, 23. As the feet were extended from the table, and as they reclined instead of sitting, it was easy to approach the feet behind, and even unperceived. Thus while Jesus reclined in this manner, a woman that had been a sinner came to his feet behind him, and washed them with her tears, and wiped them with the hairs of her head. She stood behind the couches. - Barnes' Notes.

MOUNT TABOR.

THE following description of Tabor, from the pen of a traveler, Rev. S. D. Phelps, will be interesting, whether or not we accept it as the mount of transfiguration :-

"This charming little mountain has an isolated position on the plain of Esdraelon, about twelve miles west of the Sea of Galilee. It is nearly two thousand feet above the sea-level, and unlike other mountains of Palestine, is wooded nearly to the top. It is several times mentioned in the Old Testament, but not once by name in the New. But our blessed Lord must have been familiar with it from childhood, as it is but six miles east of Nazareth, and in full view from the western bank of the Sea of Galilee. From the fourth century until modern times, it was regarded as the scene of our Lord's transfiguration. No place could be more befitting; and notwithstanding the objection urged on account of the fortress on the summit, we thought as as we wandered around the brow of that summit, and saw how many retired and shady nooks were there-how many secluded spots of charming loveliness admirably adapted to such a celestial scene-it surely might have occurred here on this 'high mountain apart.' It was here or on a spur of Hermon yonder.

"Tabor is associated with the warlike exploits of Deborah and Barak in the times of the Judges. As she gave the signal on its summit, Barak with the troops rushed down the southern slope and met the mighty foe in the valley of Meggiddo where 'the stars in their courses fought against Sisera,' and where 'the river Kishon swept them away—that ancient river the river Kishon.'

"It was a beautiful spring afternoon when we climbed up the winding and sometimes very rocky path to the summit of Tabor. A nearly level space half a mile long and half as broad at the top, is surrounded by old walls and ruined structures, one of which is a Saracenic arch called the Tower of the Winds. These ruins are partly covered with tangled thickets of thorn, dwarf oak, and rank thistles. Several deep cisterns or pits hewn in the rock are there.

In the center of the area is an open space of garden-like beauty-a grassy lawn beaming with gay and lovely flowers. Amid the ruins is a habitation for one or two monks

"The views from Tabor are varied and enchanting. We remember well how eagerly we looked from the highest point toward the northeast, and with inexpressible emotions caught a first glimpse of the Sea of Galilee where its waters lave the shores near the sites of Capernaum and Bethsaida. The course of the Jordan for a long distance can be traced, and beyond it a boundless perspective of hills and valleys stretches over ancient Gilead and Bashan. Looking south, the broad and beautiful plain of Esdraelon spreads away to the hills of Samaria, an unbroken expanse of verdure, a velvet lawn of loveliness, soft, tranquil, dream-like and unencumbered, yet in ages past the battleground of nations. On its eastern border hang Little Hermon and the villages of Endor and Nain, and south of these rises Gilboa, whose 'high places' witnessed the death of Saul and Jonathan. Further on are the mountains of Ephraim. Westward, the eye sweeps across the plain to the excellency of Carmel' and follows its bold ridge till its farthest northern slope dips into the Mediterranean Sea, which lies like a dark line in the purple horizon. The hills of Galilee intervene and enclose the memorable and pleasant village of Nazareth. Rich fields of blooming shrubbery break off at the north, from which rise the Horns of Hattin, known as the Mount of Beatitudes. Beyond are the ranges of Lebanon, one of the nearer heights crowned with Safed, 'a city set upon a hill,' and in the dim distance towers the cone of Mount Hermon, snow-capped and majestic, like a dome of glory. Thus 'Tabor is among the mountains and Carmel by the sea.' The north and the south, thou hast created them; Tabor and Hermon shall rejoice in thy name.""

HELPS TO SECURING ATTENTION.

To gain and hold the undivided attention of the class, is one of the most important points to be considered by the teacher. If we succeed in doing this, we shall be enabled to impress upon the mind whatever thoughts we may present. But if we fail to hold the attention, it will be impossible to impress upon the mind any truth, no matter how important it may be. Consequently very little will be accomplished. We see this truth demonstrated in different ways.

First, for instance, by reading one thing and thinking of another. How easy it is while perusing some paper or book, to think of our business and daily affairs! How often we read a whole paragraph without knowing what we read! How many of us have been obliged to read a verse in the Bible over and over to understand it, simply because our attention was not fixed upon what we were reading!

Second, by public speakers. That speaker who does not hold the attention of his audience, will fail to impress upon their minds the subject of which he treats. He might just as well talk to the air and trees as to people whose attention he does not

Third, by the teachers of our public fundreds of these so-called ers fail in imparting knowledge to our children and youth mainly because they do not secure their attention during recitation. We know by experience that pupils can think so intently upon their play, their dress, friends, etc., while in the class, as to be entirely deaf to all the teacher is saying. We have often failed to gain valuable instruction simply because our attention was not fixed upon the teacher. This ought not to be. It is the teacher's business to drive away this day-dreaming, arrest the attention of his class, and impress upon their minds the subject of the lesson.

And now the question arises: How can we do this? By what means shall this important work be accomplished? We offer the following as some of the most simple means to be used in securing attention.

To begin with, the teacher should himself obtain a thorough knowledge of the lesson before attempting to teach it to others. Joseph Cook says: "In order for a teacher to secure the attention of his class, he must say just what needs to be said." This implies that he must be master of the lesson. He must understand the real meaning of each question he is going to ask, and be able to give to each a clear, prompt answer. This will require careful attention, and real study on the part of the teacher. I have seen some persons acting as teachers who seemed to do the most of their thinking about the lesson after coming to the class. Everything seemed to be new-the questions not excepted. They could not tell whether an answer was right or not, until they consulted the lesson sheet. Often they would accept an answer entirely wrong. Such persons are only teachers in name. It has been truthfully said that we cannot teach others what we do not know. Let us remember, then, that if we would gain the attention of our classes, we must first obtain a thorough knowledge of the lesson.

But this is not all that is required. It is possible for a person to perfectly understand a truth, and yet fail in making it interesting to others. A double responsibility rests upon the teacher. He must not only gain knowledge, but he must impart it to others in such a way as to interest and instruct them. The manner, then, of conducting a class has much to do in gaining attention.

1st. The superintendent should open the school at the hour appointed. He should not make it a practice to wait fifteen or thirty minutes for different ones to come. If they cannot possibly get there at the hour appointed, change the time to accommodate them, but don't keep a part of the school waiting after time. This produces indifference.

2d. The teacher in most cases should stand before his class while questioning. A sitting posture does not tend to produce life and enthusiasm. It will do for very small children, but not for youth and adults.

3d. Speak in a clear full tone. Some question in such a low, mumbling way that it is difficult for the class to understand them. Such will not hold the attention

4th. Direct each question to some particular member of the class. Some ask a question and cry out for any one to answer who can. As a result, two or three of the most ready-tongued speak at once. Others who are slower and more backward, do not say anything. Finally they lose their interest, and the whole thing becomes dry. Give every one something to do. Idleness breeds inattention. By questioning each member of the class, you will also learn which ones get their lessons and which do

5th. Look at your class while questioning. If you would gain their attention, you must give them yours. That speaker or teacher who is forever looking at the floor, the ceiling, and out of the window, will fail to gain the attention of those before him. By all means give your class voiir eves.

6th. Do not allow the reading of books and papers during recitation. I have seen teachers who allowed the class to read the answers from book or lesson sheet. This is entirely wrong. We would reject a teacher of day school who would do this. While they are reading, they do not hear to repeat the question. This wrong practice will overthrow every other effort you might make to gain attention.

Besides, every one should learn the lesson well enough to be able to answer the questions without looking at the answers. I understand that the object of the Sabbath-school is to stamp eternal truths indellibly upon the minds of all who attend it. But if they do not learn the lessons well enough to answer them without reading them, this object will not be gained. The Sabbath-school will do but little good when conducted upon this plan.

7th. Be cheerful. It is true there are many things to perplex and annoy the teacher. But he must not become discouraged. As long as you attempt to teach, make an effort to be pleasant. When the members of your class see your cheerful spirit, it will make them happy. But a long, sour face and cross ways, will kill every particle of interest.

8th. Avoid long discussions. These are especially detrimental to the interest of the young. Not long since I witnessed a twenty minute's discussion in one of our Sabbath-schools about the word audience in a certain verse. Some claimed that it referred to the twelve disciples. Others argued that it meant the multitude. As a result, the children who finished their lessons twenty minutes before the debating class, grew weary, restless, and noisy. The Sabbath-school is not intended for a debating society. If you must argue, form a special discussion class, but don't turn the Sabbath-school into one.

9th. Be in earnest. Life begets life. Dullness and indifference beget the same. Consequently, if you gain and hold the attention of your class, you must be full of life and enthusiasm. From the moment you begin the exercise, put your whole soul into the work, and keep it there until you close, not allowing your interest and zeal to flag for one moment. This will produce a like feeling in the class, and aid greatly in securing attention.

10th. Be careful to seek Divine help. The Sabbath-school is a vine of God's own planting, and he will ever be ready to care for it. He will help us to do every duty if we only seek his help. And if we have the Holy Spirit with us, it will aid wonderfully in securing attention.

A. G. DANIELLS.

THE TEACHER'S AIM.

THE measure of success in any department of life, depends largely upon the purpose and aim of the individual. Before embarking upon any enterprise, either of a temporal or spiritual character, the aim to be attained should be fixed beyond question. The aim marks the degree of energy and labor put into any particular line of action or thought. It is the balancewheel that keeps the mental machinery and the activities of life in a healthy working condition. Human existence, without a definite aim as a guiding star, is like a ship on the high sea, shorn of its rudder, tossed and driven at the mercy of the tempest. It is certain, therefore, that the Sabbath-school teacher should have an abiding aim, noble in its inception, and grand in its results. A teacher with the proper conception of the responsibilities of his position, and the aim to be attained as the result of his labor, is at once master of the situation. Such a teacher cannot be thwarted in his efforts for good, by any ordinary means. The obstructions gradually pass away as he steadily presses on to the object of his aim, and Sabbath after Sabbath he sees the fruits of his labor ripening into noble characters. He is constantly inspired with new resolves, new hopes, and loftier aspirations. He sees the field of work in the Sabbath-school interest what you are saying. Often it obliges you ever widening and lengthening and deepening, inviting him to put forth renewed efforts, energy, diligence, and tact. That invitation is always eagerly and willingly accepted by the faithful teacher, and he aims constantly to raise each member of his class to a higher plane of life and usefulness. To the mind of the efficient and conscientious teacher, the importance of the Sabbath-school work is ever pressing with great weight and power. To him it is as broad as the universe, as deep as humanity, as high as heaven, and as lasting as eternity. - Teachers' Mentor.

HOU must be true thyself, If thou the truth would'st teach; Thy soul must overflow, if thou Another soul would'st reach; It needs the overflowing heart To give the lips full speech. Think truly, and thy thought Shall the world's famine feed; Speak truly, and thy word Shall be a fruitful seed; Live truly, and thy life shall be A grand and noble creed.

THE POWER OF GOD'S WORD.

Many forget the inherent power of the word of God. The inspired record tells us that it is the sword of the Spirit; that it is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword; that it shall not return void, but that it shall accomplish that for which it was given, -the conviction, conversion, and salvation of all who will receive it. Timothy was charged to preach the word. It is this word that, through the agency of the Holy Spirit, sends conviction to the sinner's heart, leads to repentance, furnishes facts and promises for faith to lay hold upon, and supplies the Christian with such instruction, admonition, and encouragement as will enable him to glorify God by a well-ordered life here, and to enjoy an eternity of bliss hereafter.

Fortunately, this word is so plain that all truths most needful to holy living may be understood by any one. In our Sabbath school teaching the most we have to do is to fix the mind on the word long enough to allow it to take its natural effect. Now it may be necessary for the preacher to harangue the multitudes, but the teacher's best way is to secure the careful study of the lesson, thereby securing that thoughtfulness and reflection so necessary to the imbibing of truth.

How often the two-edged sword of the word is sheathed in the rags of sophistry, or blunted by the officiousness of teachers who explain away all its force and beauty.

May God help us all to "receive with meekness the ingrafted word, which is able to save our souls." G. H. BELL.

SOMETHING TO CARRY HOME.

It was an unusually warm morning for June. But little air stirred the lilac bushes, and the chickens wallowing in the cool, moist earth beneath them, crouched down often, as though overcome by the

I raised my parasol as I stepped out upon the front porch, and gathered up my dress with a listless hand, as I looked over the road which stretched out to the church, whose white spire rose above the green trees in the distance; and I wondered how I was to get over that hot hill, where not a shadow broke the glare. Such a sudden outpouring of the sun's heat seemed quite overpowering. When I entered the church, I found my collection of scholars nearly complete; but I opened the closely-shut window near, and dropped into my straightbacked chair, feeling as though there was not an atom of reserve force left in me with which to tackle my duties. It was discouraging to have such feelings to contend with when I had striven so, but an hour ago, for a prayerful, tranquil mind; and I strove to overcome it. But the children, rubbing their feet on the bare floor, nearly sent me wild, and I was glad when the opening bell called us to order. But I did not regain control of myself so but that when, after the lesson was well begun, Julia Simpson, or Julia Ann, as the children called her, came in, dragging by the hand such a little mite of a brother as seemed too much to be anywhere but at home, I was annoyed. "Why can't mothers be their own nurse girls?" I thought; and I'm afraid there was the least mite of sharpness in my voice as I said, "You shouldn't bring such a baby to Sabbathschool, Julia.

"Mother said I'd got to stay and mind him then," was Julia's reply.

I made room for them, and gave the little fellow a book of pictures to keep him from talking; but of course it was n't a minute before the book went, with a bang, on the floor. When this happened for the third time, and just as I was saying, " Now children," I took the book, and much to the child's apparent wonderment, tossed it on to the table. After this for awhile the child was determined to do the talking himself; and of course every time he gave utterance to anything, in his funny babyfashion, a suppressed titter would break out from somewhere among the children composing the class. But at last I seemed to get a little of the child's attention. At any rate, the latter part of the exercise he sat swinging his fat legs, and crouched down in a sort of listening way, as though giving me his undivided attention. But I supposed this came from drowsiness, and at last I forgot him entirely.

When the school was closed and the children straggled out, I stumbled over Eben," as Julia called him. He raised his great black eyes to mine, and said, in his slightly solemn, childish way, "I'll tome adain.'

"Yes," I said; "and you must be a good little boy all the week.'

"I'll be dood, and pray Dod," he said, nodding his head like a wise judge, and marching away.

The last thing I had striven to impress upon the children's minds had been the need of prayer-for everything and at all times; and I was surprised that even so much, as seemed by the child's words, had been grasped by him. And going home, thinking over it, the breeze seemed a good deal fresher than when I went over the road before, though it was an hour nearer noon; and the way was not half so long and tiresome.

The next Sabbath I looked for little Eben, but Julia came without him, and in time the incident of his ever having come slipped from my mind. A few weeks later I stood one morning out among my late roses, clipping and tying up, and smelling of this and that half opened rose, when a 'hem" caused me to turn suddenly, and I found a woman standing beside me. How she had opened the gate and trodden the gravel walk without my knowing it, was a mystery; but there she was, and as she did not say anything, I said, "Good morning." She answered with a nod, and then stood awkwardly twisting the fringe of her shawl between her thumb and finger. Not knowing what else to say, I asked, "Can I do anything for you?"

"Well, no-that is, I only thought I'd like you to know how we'd got on the right track again."

"Ah," I said, not having the remotest idea as to who "we" were, or what "track" they had generally been on.

"Yes, I kinder felt as though I'd like you to know how much good you'd done us.'

"I?" I said in astonishment, as I pulled off my garden gloves, and walking to the porch, pushed one of the garden chairs toward my strange visitor, taking the remaining one myself. "I do not see how that can be, when I never saw you before."

"But you've seen Bub," and the woman laughed, and the laugh seemed to take ten years right off her age.

"Bub, who's Bub?" I asked, struggling to get hold of what the woman meant.

"Why, my Bub, Ebenezer, that Julia Ann took to Sabbath-school."

"Oh," I said, the Julia Ann letting in a little light. "You're Julia Simpson's mother? I remember little Eben's coming with her one day. Yes, yes."

"Well, you see-" and the woman settled back, as though surer of her ground now-"I used to mind about religion, quite a sight, when we were first married. But after things got going so hard with us, and it was work, work, and money always short, and the children coming along, and so little time for anything, we kinder forgot about it; and when we didn't, there did not seem to be much chance for such things; and I used to tell Rufus-he's my husband—that there wasn't much time for poor folks to be religious in, and he seemed to think it was about so. Well, as I started to tell, the next day after Bubby went to Sabba h-school was what some people call 'blue Monday with me. The baby'd been worrying all night.

"Oh, no; you ha'n't seen my baby yet. She's most a year old, and a wonderful sight like her father. As I was saying, she'd kept me awake; and now there was the big washing, and the sun up so hot before I got at it; and taking it all round, it seemed as though I never could go through with it all; and after I'd rubbed a little, I just dropped into a chair with my hand on my back, saying, 'It's no sort o' use; I never can do it.' Bub was on the floor with the baby's playthings, and I didn't suppose he was minding me one bit; but he looked up with those great eyes o' his'n, and says he, shaking his head, 'Why don't you tell Dod so?' I thought it must be I hadn't heard him right, and so I asked, 'What did you say, Eben?' 'I say,' he said, rising to his feet, 'why don't you tell Dod so, and not bover so about it?' I got right up, and went about my work, but I was sort o' numb like, as though I'd got a blow. You see it was so queer like for Eben to talk like that. I tried to move about lively, and get myself free, but I couldn't, and at last I went into the bedroom, where baby was in bed asleep, and, shutting the door, I did just tell the Lord all about it, just how tired I was, and how hard everything was going, and how little strength I had, and asked him to get me through the day the best he could; and when I went back to the kitchen, my heart was as light as a feather, and I broke right out singing, as though I was a girl. But I ha'n't got to the best of it," she continued, as I moved a little, to get my handkerchief. "If you'll believe me, as I was a-takin out the first boiling, who should come in but Rufus, and, says he, 'I did n't have quite the right lumber I wanted for the job, so I thought 't was so late I'd come home and help a bit, and not go after it till noon. Now, I don't believe Rufus had done such a thing as that afore since the first year we was married, and what do you suppose could have put it into his head unless-" Simpson hesitated, as though I might not quite agree with her, I thought. So I hastened to say, "Unless the Lord put it into his heart. Of course you have a perfect right to think it in direct answer to prayer.

"Well, so it seemed to me and Rufus," said Mrs. Simpson, pulling her shawl up around her; "and you don't know what a comfort it has been to us, and we've just taken a new start; and it's wonderful how easy things do go now. And when I went by this morning, and saw you a-standing out in the garden, I felt as though I'd like you to know what a sight of good what Bubby brought home did for us."

"Well. I'm sure, Mrs. Simpson," I said, shaking her hand warmly, "it does help me to go on with the little ones. Sometimes it seems as though I could n't get anything done up small enough for them to take."

"Do n't you ever think that again, for it's wonderful how these little folks do manage to get hold of things;" and Mrs. Simpson, with another shake of the hand, walked away.

How do you think I felt after she was gone? I can't tell you exactly how, but I know I felt a good deal as though I ought to ask somebody's pardon, and I went down before God, in that little back parlor of mine, for a long time; and the next Sabbath, when Julia brought in Eben, gay in a new suit of blue waterproof, with brass buttons, I gave him the very best seat there was; and all that lesson time I tried to strip my talk free from big words, so that even the smallest should have something to carry home.—Selected.

FEEDING CHRIST'S LAMBS.

SAID the Saviour to Peter, just after his resurrection, "Feed my lambs." The Lord has sheep, but he also has lambs. And never, during the long centuries of the gospel dispensation, have these words been more appropriate than to-day. Christ's solemn charge to Peter, "Feed my lambs for me," as the quaint old Syriac Version gives it, is also addressed to us. The duty to feed the lambs, (Greek, "the little lambs") is just as binding as ever. The Good Shepherd did not forget his sheep; he also did not forget the lambs. And where can these lambs, these little lambs. get better food than in the Sabbathschool ?

Probably this command of Christ was never so fully, so systematically, and so literally carried out as at the present day. This is emphatically the Sabbath-school period. And it is just blessed to live and consider what is being done for the children

Every denomination is on the alert in this matter. The best talent in the church is enlisted, and the army of Sabbath-school workers is becoming enthused with the subject. Faithful teachers are coming to the front with the best methods, the wisest plans, and the most suitable lessons, so that the interest of the children may be secured. In this way the terrible wiles of Satan are circumvented and his kingdom made to tremble. God is certainly in this matter. And when he is moving, inspiring, and blessing, we cannot afford to sit still. The blessed words of the Saviour are still echoing down the ages, "Feed my lambs!"

THE REPORTS.

WE have reports from all our State Associations, twenty-one in number, besides a few miscellaneous reports from States where there are no organized Associations. This report is, altogether, quite an encouraging one, though we regret the incompleteness in some of them; but this seems to be mostly due to the slackness of the school secretaries rather than the State secretaries. For instance, in many cases no average attendance is given. Now of course if there had been a school at all, there must have been some attendance; and if records had not been properly kept, so that a correct average could be obtained, some approximate at least should have been given, so that there might be something like a correct relation between the total membership and attendance of the State.

New blanks have lately been issued, which will be sent to each school at the end of this quarter; and we hope that every secretary will take some pride in completely and correctly filling out the blank sent him, and promptly returning it to his State secretary. Or if for any reason your school has been discontinued during the last quarter, notify him of the fact by postal, and thus save him the trouble of writing to know why you have not reported. These may seem trifling matters; but if a thing is worth doing at all, it is worth doing well.

But while there are a few things to find fault with, there are many to commend. We believe the Sabbath-school interest is deepening and broadening; and what we most need is courage. Though your school may be small, your advantages limited, and the work that you can do a very humble one, toil steadily on. "What now ye do ye know not, but shall hereafter know; for only eternity will reveal the work done "under the surface,"-- the results of humble service. If you have led one little child to see light in a Bible truth, and thus given him "something to carry home," you know not the work which you perhaps have been the means of starting, -no, nor never may know here, -but eternity will tell. And let us never for a moment lose sight of the real and true aim of all Sabbath school labor,—the cultivation of a love and appreciation of the word of God.

WHAT THEY SAY.

We have good and encouraging letters from several of our State secretaries, from some of which we will give a few words.

Bro. Frank S. Porter, Sec. of Vermont, says: "The Sabbath-school interest in old Vermont still lives, and is in most schools doing well."

Mrs. Clara Gibbs, the newly-elected Secretary for Kansas, writes a stirring appeal to the schools of that State, urging them to promptness and faithfulness in all their duties, especially the work of reporting, which she feels that some are inclined to neglect. We would gladly give the whole letter room, did space permit. It is good to see her taking hold of her work with so much courage and energy. As she says, "We must have energetic work."

Sister Lizzie Campbell says for Illinois: "Will only say that the interest in S. S. work, so far as I can judge by the prompt reports and letters received, was never better." This is a pretty good way to judge. We notice that every school in Illinois is reported.

Bro. R. D. Benham, Sec. North Pacific Association, after speaking of some of the difficulties with which they have to contend, says: "But although the work may seem wearisome sometimes, and the wheel move hard, yet we are doing the Lord's work; and this thought gives me courage to press on"

Sister M. O. Beck, Sec. of Upper Columbia Association, gives some account of the individual schools in their Conference, and seems desirous of instructions which shall enable her to perform the duties of her office thoroughly.

W. R. Foggins writes from Jerry's Run, Wood Co., W. Va. : "Noticing a request that the State officers report the progress of the schools in their State, I thought I would say a few words, as we have no State Association here. The Sabbath school in this place is the oldest in the State; it was organized in 1879, by Eld. Sanborn. At the time of organization we had twenty-six names enrolled, but our school at present numbers but seventeen. I am sorry to say that those who have been dropped are the ones that are needed most, as they would have constituted the senior division, and their presence and influence would have held the young people. . . who have been faithful in the Sabbathschool work here have been richly rewarded by the knowledge they have obtained. Studying these lessons in the Instructor is a good way to follow the noble example given by the Bereans. Acts 17:11."

TO STATE SECRETARIES.

WE would ask the State Secretaries to be very careful in footing the columns of their reports, as their careless add-ing necessitates much tedious work for the Sec. of the Gen. Asso. Only a few of the reports were found to be entirely correct; and you must know that the task of adding over all the reports is no slight one; and quite likely, ing over all the reports is no slight one; and quite likely, with all the care that has been taken, many mistakes have still escaped notice. Besides putting the family schools on the back of the blank, please add them in with the others also, distinguishing them with a star or dagger; as in the printed reports. By so doing you will save us considerable extra work. One thing more: When you go out of office by a new election, will you please send at once to the Secretary of the General Association the name and P. O. address of your successor?

THE LITTLE GIRL THAT SAID PLEASE.

WE don't know what her name was. She was on board the same train where we were riding. We could n't teli whether her dress was silk or calico, nor whether her hair was in curls or braids. Her father and mother were with her, and a young lady who may have been her sister, and a little boy whom she called her brother.

The train had stopped to wait for another going the other way. It was a through train, and we had been riding several hours, so some of us improved the time in taking a lunch. Just then we heard a pleasant voice say, "Please, papa, will you lend me your knife?" We looked around, and saw the little girl we are writing about.

After a while the sun shone into our side of the car, and we changed to a vacant seat behind the little girl who said "please." Her smiling countenance and gentle ways made it a real pleasure to watch her. She was cutting an apple, which she carefully pared, and passed the pieces round, reserving the smallest for herself. When she was through using the knife, she closed it, and said, "Thank you," as she handed it to her father.

All along the journey she showed the same thoughtful politeness. When her little brother got tired waiting at the station, she told him stories, not fairy stories, but those she had learned at Sabbath-school. Then we thought, this is part of the secret of her gentle ways. She learned at Sabbath-school to be thoughtful of others, and that is one of the best rules for true politeness.

We sometimes think that these little courtesies are of no consequence, that "Thank you," and "Please," are a waste of words, but they are like the sunshine which brightens the winter days. When we solicit or receive a favor, the least we ought to do is to acknowledge it by courteous words. If the children cultivate a respectful and polite manner at home, they will have it ready for use when abroad, and as they grow older, it will help admit them to the society of the good and wise.

Toward night we left the train. The little girl and her friends were journeying farther. We do not know where they went, nor have we heard from them since, but we often remember her, and we like to think of her. Little girl, was it you? Or at least do you say please, as she did ?- The Myrtle.

our homes. And what can make a home more cheerful than cheerful, but this little girl had a way of liking bright children? A cheerful boy is never thought such a terrible nuisance about a house, and a cheerful girl is a perfect little beam of sunlight, that penetrates the darkest corners of the house, and almost makes the old clock put on a pleasant face. We want our paper to help make the boys and girls cheerful, and then we want them to help make our paper cheerful.

SHINING FOR JESUS.

RE you shining for Jesus, darlings? You have given your hearts to him; But is the light strong within them, or is it but pale and dim?

Can everybody see it that Jesus is all to you? That your love to him is burning with radiance warm and true?

Is the seal upon your forehead so that it must be known

That you are "all of Jesus"-that your hearts are all his own?

Are you shining for Jesus, darlings, so that the holy light

May enter the hearts of others and make them glad and bright?

Have you spoken a word for Jesus and told to some around,

Who do not care about him, what a Saviour you have found? Have you lifted the lamp for others, that has guided your own glad feet? Have you echoed the loving message that seemed to you so sweet?

Are you shining for Jesus, darlings,-shining just everywhere,

Not only in easy places, not only just here and there?

Shining in happy gatherings where all are loved and known?

Shining where all are strangers, shining when quite alone?

Shining at home and making true sunshine all around?

Shining at school, and faithful perhaps among faithless found?

Are you shining for Jesus, darlings? Or is there a little sigh the lamp his love has lighted does not burn clear and high!

Is the heavenly crown that waits you still without a star, Because your light was hidden and sent no rays afar? Do you feel you have not loved him with love right brave and loyal, But have faintly fought and followed his banner bright and royal? Then rise and "watching daily" ask him your lamps to trim With the fresh oil he giveth, that they may not burn dim.

Yes, rise and shine for Jesus; be brave and bright and true,

To the true and loving Saviour, who gave himself for you.

Oh, shine for Jesus, darlings! and henceforth be

Bright with the light that shineth unto the perfect day !- Frances Ridley Havergal.

HATTIE'S NEIGHBORS.

ATTIE listened very attentively when her father read at family worship, the parable of the good Samaritan. And afterward she sat alone on the back door-step, and wondered in her small seven-year-old head, if people fell among thieves nowadays, and whether the poor hurt man ever got well again. Mamma or grandma or sister Belle, would have ex-CHEERFULNESS is what is needed in plained the story, and talked it over with Hattie, if she had gone to them; to think out some things for herself.

It was soon time for Hattie to go to school, and tying on her hat, taking her little satchel, and kissing mamma, off she skipped down the street to Miss Lester's kindergarten. She had not gone very far before she saw Katy Terry, the washerwoman's little girl, sitting on the curb-stone, crying. "I don't think any thieves would come after her," said Hattie, helped her some! And I think its real

"but she's crying, and nobody takes any notice of her." So Hattie went up, and asked Katy what was the matter.

"Oh, I had five cents," sobbed Katy, "and I've dropped three somewhere along here. I can't find them, and mother needs every cent, I know."

"I'll help look for them," said Hattie, just a little disappointed that Katy had not been beaten by somebody. So the two children poked in the gutter, and searched carefully around; and at last to their great delight found two cents of Katy's money. But the other cent was hopelessly out of sight. "Kate," said Hattie slowly, "I've got one cent. Mamma gave it to me to buy a slate pencil, because Eddie broke mine. But I've got a piece of pencil, and you may have the cent."

"But your mother might not like it," said Katy.

"It's mine, she wont care," said Hattie; so the cent changed owners, and thanking Hattie, Katy ran away

"The man in the story," said Hattie to herself, "gave the poor hurt man two pence; but Kate was n't hurt, so I guess my one cent will do."

At recess Janie White, the little lame scholar sat on the steps, and watched the others racing on the playground. Hattie looked toward her several times, and felt sorry for Janie; at last she went and sat on the steps too, and told Janie about the beautiful scrap-book Aunt Mary had made for Hattie and Eddie. And Janie grew very much interested, and thought she could make a scrap-book, too, as she had a great many pictures saved at

Just after school closed, as Hattie was reaching her sacque and hat, Miss Lester called her.

"Hattie, can your bright eyes see this little splinter which has run into my finger, from the edge of my desk? I am a little too near-sighted."

Hattie took her teacher's slender white finger in her little fat ones, and with a needle soon took out the splin-

"Now, Miss Lester," said Hattie gravely, "if I had some wine and oil, I'd put it on your finger. That's good for hurts, the Bible says so."

"And my little girl has remembered a Bible story, I see," said Miss Lester, smiling. "I don't think my finger needs anything. But you have been a neighborly little girl to-day. I saw you leave the others, and sit with poor little Janie."

"Was that being neighborly?" said Hattie, with brightening eyes. "I've been wishing I could find some hurt somebody to help, though Janie's lame to be sure, and Katy Terry needed a cent, so I gave her mine."

"Helping whoever needs your help that is being neighborly, Hattie. And that is what Jesus told that parable for, and that is why it has come down to us."

"Mamma," said Hattie that evening, as she sat on a low stool beside her mother before going to bed, "do you know I had lots of neighbors today, even Miss Lester, because I nice to have neighbors, don't you? Even if they ar'n't hurt like the man in the Bible was."

Mamma said it was very nice, and she hoped Hattie would keep trying to help her neighbors for Jesus' sake. - Lucy Randolph Fleming.

WHY EVERYBODY IS CROSS.

ONE day little John Wilson came running into the house where his sister Mary was sewing. He held something in his hand which he had found in the back yard.

"Oh, sister Mary," said he, "I have found a pretty thing. It is a piece of red glass. When I look through it, everything looks red, too. The trees, the houses, the green grass, your face, and everything is red."

Mary replied, "Yes, it is very beautiful; and now let me show you how to learn a useful lesson from it. You remember the other day you thought every person was cross to you. Now you were like this piece of glass, which makes everything red because it is red. You were cross, so you thought everybody around you was cross, too. If you are in good humor, and kind to everybody, they will seem kind to you."-Sel.

"There is no little child too small to work for God, There is a mission for us all from Christ the

LETTER BUDGET.

Mabel V. Lemons writes from Damascus, Oregon: "Sister Cora and myself are spending the Sabbath with my Sabbathschool teacher and her two children, Harry and Edith Kingsbury. We are learning the ten commandments in our class. Minnie Miller and myself repeated them all to-day. Minnie is six, and I am nine years of age. Little Grant Hiscox and Bell Baker did not come to Sabbath-school to-day; we missed them very much. Harry and Edith's grandma is sending us cards from London, England, if we get our lessons perfect."

Here is a request from a lady in Ft. Scott, Kansas, which we will give room in the "Budget." She says: "Some weeks ago there was a letter printed in the In-STRUCTOR from some children by the name of Carpenter, who said they lived at Ft. Scott. I would say that we have Sabbathschool and meetings every Sabbath, and would like their help. We would cordially invite them to attend our meetings, which are usually held at Wm. Naylor's, the house opposite Judge Waters."

Alonzo Rockwell, who wrote us a letter last spring, now writes again. His sister who was sick with consumption, and with whom he lived, died June 20. Her last words were "I am happy." She left two little children. Alonzo says his paper is a great comfort to him. He hopes to meet his sister in Heaven.
