EMPLOYMENT PHILOSOPHY
FOR
LOMA LINDA FOODS

The Seventh-day Adventist Church believes that man was made in the image of God. The entrance of sin into the world marred that image and separated man from his Maker, to his physical, mental, and spiritual detriment. The effects of sin ultimately can be eliminated only by the beneficent influence of the Gospel, the principal goal of which is to make man truly whole. The Church believes that its health and food ministry distinctively contributes to the restoration of the whole man. This belief derives from the Bible-based conviction that man, made in the image of God, has a responsibility toward his Creator, recognizing himself to be "the temple of the living God. . . bought with a price," and that it is incumbent upon him to care for his body as well as his spirit, since both belong to God.

These convictions led the Church into a world-wide ministry of healing (sanitariums, hospitals, leprosariums, clinics) and of teaching (health classes, stop-smoking clinics, dietary instruction, cookery schools). Its conviction that a vegetarian diet is near to the ideal planned by the Creator influenced the Church to establish food industries for the production of plant protein foods. Since 1893 these have supplied specialized types of food that conform to the standards recommended in the Church's teachings.

This food ministry, by continual research in food processing technology, and by the production of palatable, nourishing, and inexpensive foods, assists men to avoid illnesses caused by disregard of health principles and by those that arise from the high incidence of disease and contaminants in flesh meat.

The objectives of the food ministry of the Church are in part defined in the writings of Ellen G. White, one of the early leaders of the Seventh-day Adventist Church, and one who, because of inspired insights, wrote with more than ordinary knowledge.

"The productions which God has supplied are to be made up into healthful foods which people can prepare for themselves. Then we can appropriately present the principles of health reform and those who hear will be convinced of the consistency of these principles and will accept them. But until we can present health reform foods which are palatable, nourishing, and yet inexpensive we are not at liberty to present the most advanced phases of health reform in diet." Ellen G. White, Letter 98, 1901.

"When conducted in such a manner that the gospel of Christ is brought to the attention of the people, the health-food work can be profitably engaged in. But I lift my voice in warning against efforts that accomplish nothing more than the production of foods to supply the physical needs. It is a serious mistake to employ so much time and so much of the talents of men and women, in manufacturing foods, while no special effort is made at the same time to supply the multitudes with the bread of life. Great dangers attend a work that has not for its object the revelation of the way of eternal life." Counsels on Diet and Foods, Ellen G. White, p. 277.

"The health food business is in need of means and of the active cooperation of our people that it may accomplish the work it ought to do. Its purpose is to supply the people with food that will take the place of flesh meat, and also milk and butter, which on account of the diseases of cattle, are becoming more and more objectionable." Counsels on Diet and Foods, Ellen G. White, p. 350.

In fulfillment of such counsels, the health food work operated by the Church is not simply a commercial enterprise, but endeavors to combine its specialized function with the primary purpose of the Church in preaching the gospel. This concept is defined in a further quotation from Ellen G. White:

"...there should be facilities for the manufacture of inexpensive, necessary health foods. Worldly policy is not to be brought into this work. . . The health food business should be regarded as God's gift to His people." Ellen G. White, Letter 25, 1902

Employees of Seventh-day Adventist food industries are encouraged to think of themselves, therefore, as being engaged in God's service by producing and selling nutritious foods, teaching and advancing reform in diet. It is expected that their lives be in harmony with the following counsel:

"The Lord desires to have, in connection with this institution (a food factory), men and women who love and fear Him. Those who are engaged in the work of preparing health foods are just as much in the service of God as if they were in the dentistry business or in the medical missionary work. As you help prepare health foods, you are doing God's service." Ellen G. White, Letter 151, 1900.

In addition to these basic objectives, one other, related yet different, requires separate definition.

Health Education In association with the health ministry of the Church, Seventh-day Adventist food industries participate in education programs by which the laws of healthful living are presented both to church members and the general public to assist them in relating habits of daily living to these laws.

"There is a great work to be done in bringing the principles of health reform to the notice of the people. Public meetings should be held to introduce the subject, and schools should be held in which those who are interested can be told more particularly about our health foods and how a wholesome, nourishing, appetizing diet can be provided without the use of meat, tea, or coffee. Thus we did in the early history of our work. We taught the people by demonstration that we can safely depend for the sustenance of life upon the productions which God gave our first parents in Eden. Let men engage in this work who can speak on the principles of health reform." Ellen G. White, Letter 343, 1904.

Motivation Physical facilities in denominational food industries may not differ greatly from those of purely commercial concerns. These food industries are distinctive because their staffs have distinctive motivation, dedication, and objectives. These are the elements which the Church seeks to preserve so that the food industry, as part of the church program, will contribute to the ultimate objective of the denomination, that of preparing a people for the coming of their Lord. This spiritual objective is fostered each morning by a brief religious service held in all Seventh-day Adventist food production centers.

It will be readily recognized that the above ideals can best be realized by those who share these convictions concerning the relation between the physical and the spiritual components of men's lives. Thus Loma Linda Foods considers for employment only those who are in harmony with the above stated objectives. Such employees are then an integral part of the Church's ministry to the world around them.
